

Find Your Right Path

Most people spend more time working then they do at home. Why not work on something that is meaningful?

What Do You Want To Do When You Grow Up?

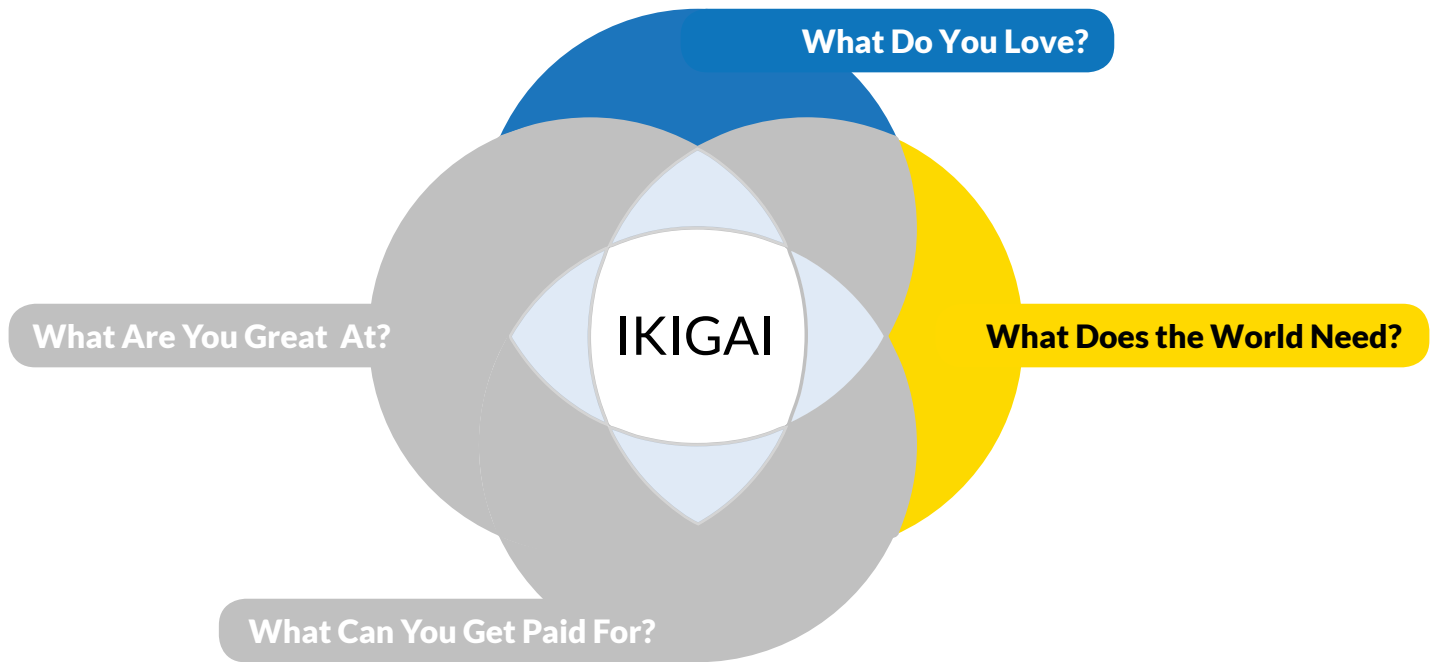

This is a model called Ikigai. It is a Japanese concept that means “a reason for being.” The word “ikigai” is usually used to indicate the source of value in one’s life or the things that make one’s life worthwhile.

Society tells you to follow your passion, but that isn't enough. Doing something you get joy out of is a must, “but a meaningful and successful career requires you to find a balance with these 4 core areas above.

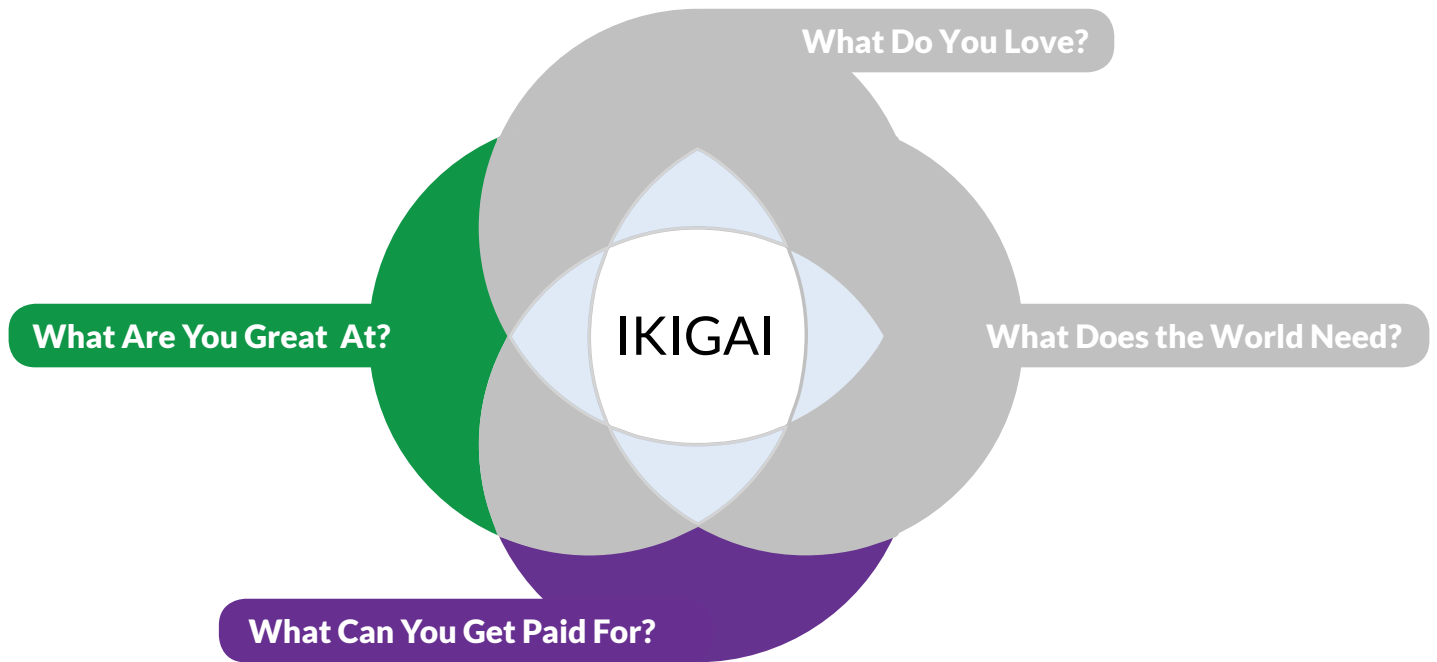

Trying to get to the center is tough. It takes time, self discovery, asking tough questions, development of specialized knowledge, the ability to identify problems, and the willingness to serve.

What Can You Get Paid For?

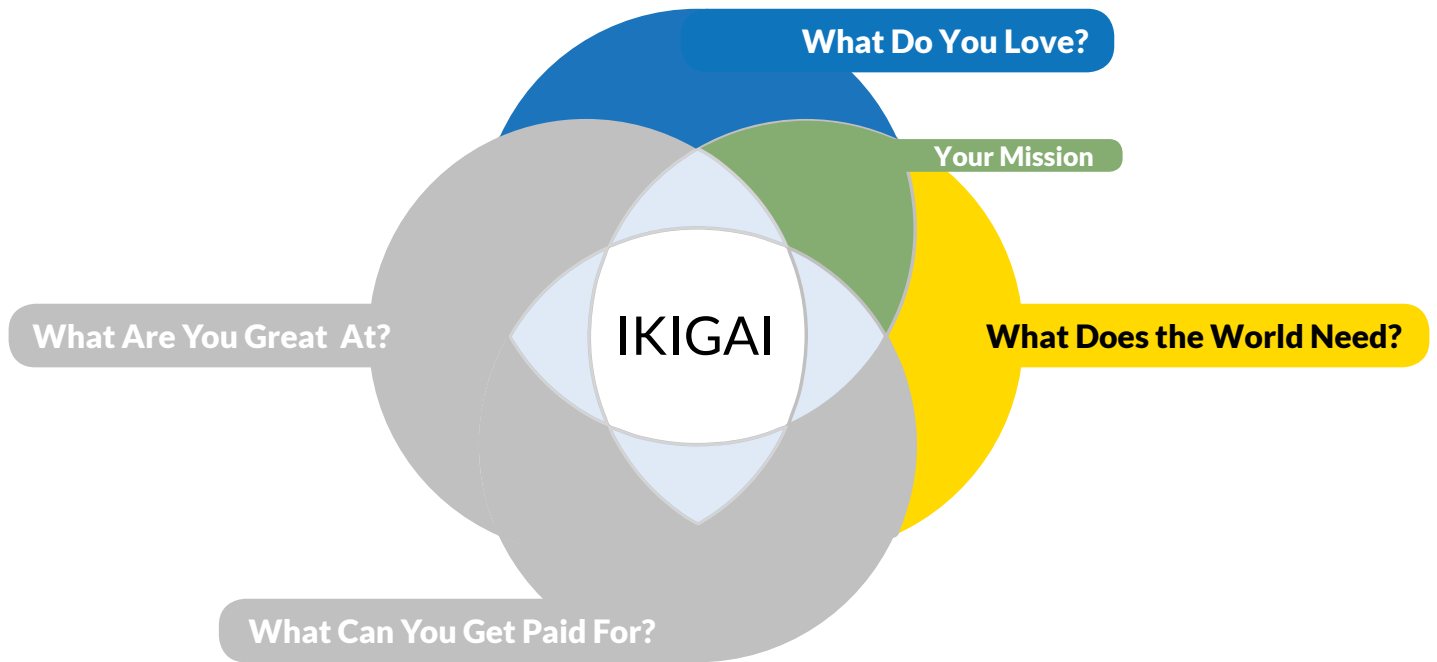

Below the diagram, there are two large empty boxes for reflection, each with a header:

- What Are You Great At? (Green header)
- What Do You Love? (Blue header)

Below these boxes is a central box labeled Your Passion (Teal header).

Below the Your Passion box is a large empty box for reflection.

How you put all of these pieces together is up to you - no one can tell you how they fit together for you.

Spend some time evaluating what you have discovered in this exercise.

What energizes you the most?

Ask others if you get stuck - often others see strengths we oversee in ourselves.
